

IT'S SNOWING IN THIRD GRADE!

After reading "The Purple Coyote" by Cornette, students were left wondering what happened to the little boy who turned purple. So I challenged students to create their own endings. They started with a sentence that they thought would come next. Then they crumbled their paper into a snowball shape and tossed them in the air. Next they found a snowball that wasn't theirs and added another sentence to continue the story. After three rounds of snowball tossing their stories were complete.

We ended the lesson with sharing their unusual and hilarious new endings.
